

Jane Carthey is an Architect and Project Manager with over 25 years experience in health design. Until 2010, Jane was Director of the Centre for Health Assets Australasia at the University of NSW and in this role was the Program Manager for the development and review of the Australasian Health Facility Guidelines (AusHFG), Associate Professor in Construction Management, and published widely. Her expertise includes evidence-based collaborative design; conceptual modelling of change ready and future proofed hospitals; development and use of design guidelines in practice; climate change, disaster responses and impacts on Australian hospitals. She works with Rice Daubney in Sydney Australia as a Senior Health Architect and Researcher, and is also inaugural Chair of the Australian Health Design Council.